

Chairman Powell,

The FCC should cease regulating who owns television and radio as well as what content is allowed. Why is it that competition is stifled by the federal regulation? Why is it that corporate buyers can own many stations but an individual person cannot start a competing radio or tv broadcast without going through mountains of red tape and permits. This does not benefit the public and violates the U.S. Consitution by restricting free speech. The FCC needs to simply regulate the spectrum such that frequencies are not overlapped by multiple broadcast stations. Nothing more. Nothing less.

Mark Ruocco